Get adults reading aloud every day, even to older children. Half an hour daily is not too much. Long books like Harry Potter or The Hobbit- even if they think they know them from the films.

A stock of art materials would be useful. Painting and drawing will help release tension, and like stories, take them to a wider world. Try designing a new book cover for 'Lioayr y Doofyr' or 'The Knight and the Squire'.

Keep a daily diary. It's good to record feelings as well as events. You could explain how this was done by many children/others during WW2 and as part of the 'Mass Observation' initiative, it made a lasting historical record of difficult times which is still valuable. So watch your spelling/punctuation if you want to end up in the annals of history!

Maths

White Rose are posting suitable weekly maths material for parents which will complement and not conflict with any work we've done in class. Allow 20-30 minutes daily. The lessons are all available on the White Rose Maths website at <https://whiterosemaths.com/homelearning/> while <http://www.mathsphere.co.uk/fun/> has lots of simple games which encourage logical thinking and problem solving-we need these skills more than ever. BBC bitesize fractions KS1 and KS2 have a selection of clips and related games. Fractions is our current maths topic, but take your time. Most children find fractions hard so just go as far as they can. Keep times tables fresh with topmarks.co.uk times tables games.

Spelling

Try topmarks.co.uk 'Spooky Spelling', which can be set at different levels.
